

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

AFFAIRS OF THE ASSOCIATION

RESOLUTIONS.

To all the news of the sudden death of Judge Alexander W. Terrell came as a great shock. Notwithstanding his venerable age and his great usefulness in the past, one felt that there was much that he could yet do. No one feels this more keenly than the members of the Texas State Historical Association, whose presiding officer he was. His varied public career, his extensive acquaintance with the public men of three generations, his remarkable memory, his keen analysis of personal motive and character, and his unusual gifts as a conversationalist had given him an extraordinary fund of knowledge and personal reminiscence. For a long time addresses on patriotic or memorial occasions alone served to make drafts on these riches, but during late years, in response to the insistent demands of his friends, he agreed to write his memoirs. It is hoped that he had made much progress in this undertaking, but the fact that the task was far from complete is quite certain. His election to the presidency of the State Historical Association on March 2, 1908, and his re-election and the exercises that marked the annual meetings since had helped to draw his attention to this kind of work. To the October QUARTERLY, 1910, he contributed an article on "The City of Austin from 1839 to 1865"; to the January QUARTERLY, 1911, he contributed a revision of his memorial address on "Stephen F. Austin," and among the last things to engage his attention was an article now in press and to appear in the October QUARTERLY, entitled "Reminiscences of General Sam Houston." These were, however, only the beginning of many similar articles that he had planned, some of which he had almost completed.

In the death of Judge Terrell the Texas State Historical Association has lost a distinguished member and a faithful and efficient officer, and the state has lost a citizen whose richly endowed mind could have contributed much to recovering the unwritten history of its stirring past.

E. W. WINKLER,
Z. T. FULMORE,
E. C. BARKER,

September 15, 1912.

Committee.

The annual meeting of the Texas State Historical Association will be held at the University of Texas on March 2, 1913. Members will receive further announcements and copies of the program during February.